AFTER PROF A's NOTES

i used to play with my sister in a small space. i was tiny. she was feisty and taught me to hold my own. she would jump on me and bite me. she taught me alot. then one day i left her. i don't even remember her any more. i left her and was moved to a much bigger place. there were two large animals in this place. i was scared at first, but these two animals spent a lot of time with me. i became quite comfortable. there were plenty of places to sleep and stretch and sharpen my claws. this space also had lots of shadows and reflections i could chase. i would jump and fly through the air chasing after my imaginary prey. when i was able to sneak in i would play in the smaller, dark spaces. i climbed up all these soft things since they were easy to i sink my claws into. each time i would get higher and higher. it was a fun test of might. during the day i sleep in the sun and watch other animals move around on the other side. i like to sleep in my comfy places too. when it gets dark i often sleep with the other animals because it gets quite cold and i am pretty small. but i also play at night. i walk all the places and make sure everything is where it should be. i think this is the time i would probably kill things to eat, but there aren't anythings around to kill and i always seem to have food when i get hungry. the other animals have strong paws and give good head and back rubs. it usually puts me to sleep. i am not quite sure what all of this is, but this place is comfortable and the other animals are nice. i feel safe and it's not so bad.

they called her connie
but at first we called her cat
now we ask her "who's a cat?"
